

PAST LEADERS.

When the remains of John Warwick Daniel are committed to the earth at Lynchburg this afternoon, it can truly be said that the last of old Virginia statesmen has passed beyond. Daniel, lived from the old into the new, and before he retired from the Senate he saw the Government grappling with problems of which no man thought when the Senator first entered public life; yet, in spirit, in civility and in temperament, he belonged to that noble company of elder statesmen who made Virginia what it is.

Daniel entered upon his great career when these men were passing. John M. Mason was no longer in public life; R. M. T. Hunter had paid for his fidelity to the South by being ejected from office; Henry A. Wise had joined the Republicans; John B. Baldwin, Robert V. Conrad, Robert G. Scott, George W. Randolph, James A. Seddon and the rest had either felt the burden of increasing years or else had died. Yet it was from these men and from a study of their deeds, that Senator Daniel received his inspiration. He was the Thirteenth Apostle, so to say, of the Old Order and he carried its charms with him to the end.

A Republic, we are told, is always ungrateful, and a people ruled by themselves are always forgetful. We have ceased to rejoice in the greatness of these leaders who stood by Virginia in her bloody trial, and it is only when the last of them passes that we remember their greatness and think of their brave deeds and recall those qualities of statesmanship which gave them their claim upon the people.

The past leaders of Virginia, of whom Daniel was one, were first of all men of the highest ability. The glamour of the Old Dominion had begun to fade, even in their day and States had arisen to dispute the supremacy of Virginia in the councils of the Nation; yet these men lacked none of that political foresight and ability which carried their fathers to high office and seated seven Virginians in the White House. If anyone doubts the ability of Virginia's wartime leaders, let one read their speeches—read what Hunter said of finance, what Mason said on the rights of the States, what half a score others wrote in the most trying hours of the Republic. There is wisdom and genius and probability and statercraft in every word.

Then, too, the past leaders of Virginia were men above political office. They led because they were forced to lead, and not because they found in office-holding a salve for personal vanity or a syp for self-adulation. They fought bitterly in the party campaigns, but they were true to the spirit of the old parties and fought "for principles, not men." There was never any doubt as to speak their mind, and were never silent when questioned by their constituents. They held the platform on which they stood above the offices they sought, and they were true to the ore if they lost the other.

Yet the past leaders were perhaps more distinguished for their probity than for their ability, their exalted idea of office, or that chivalry which is most frequently associated with them. They knew nothing of "constructive mileage," and when Sam Houston insisted on drawing it he was held up to the contempt of the nation. They had few luxuries in congress, they never padded the legislative appropriation bill, and they died before the word "graft" was invented. When one of their number stooped to a base or dishonest or a doubtful transaction, he was burned beneath the indignant protest of his people—instead of being sent to the Senate.

All of them have gone. Goode and Daniel were the last: both have passed. The Government moves on; the people go about their business; Congressmen will debate and Senators will confer; the barlequins sit to-day where the great men sat yesterday; America is the poorer for their passing and the Nation is the loser.—Richmond Times.

Echoes of the comet are still heard: For the first time in a long while the Rockingham Va., county, jail is empty. The jailer is opening doors and windows airing the cells and the Harrisonburg policemen are complaining of the good order. Halley's comet and the violent electric storms are getting the credit for the vacant cells. It is argued that the comet, with the accompanying idea that the world was coming to an end, drove many negroes and ignorant whites into the church and made for better morals.—Alexandria Gazette.

FOLEY KIDNEY PILLS HAVE CURED ME!
The above is a quotation from a letter written by H. M. Winkler, Evansville, Ind. "I contracted a severe case of kidney trouble. My back gave out and pained me. I seemed to have lost all strength and ambition; was bothered with dizzy spells, my head would swim and specks float before my eyes. I took Foley's Kidney Pills regularly and am now perfectly well and feel like a new man. Foley Kidney Pills have cured me." Schmitt's Drug Store.

It said that a number of the Wheeling churches are abolishing mixed choirs. Within the past few months a score of churches have readjusted their choirs by having male quartettes because of an "absence of harmony" in the dress of the women. One pastor who started the movement for entirely male choirs says that many of the women dress too candidly, are giddy, talkative, inquisitive, and always exhibiting the wearing apparel of the members of the congregation.

HAY FEVER AND ASTHMA

A little girl was sent by her mother to the grocery-store with a jug for a quart of vinegar. "But mama, I can't say that word!" "But you must try," said the mother. "for I want vinegar, and there's no one else to send." So the little girl went. When she reached the store she put the jug on the counter with a thud, and said, "There, smell that and give me a quart."

MUST BE ABOVE SUSPICION
Kidney and bladder ailments are so serious in their consequences, and if unchecked so often fatal that any remedy offered for their cure must be above suspicion. Foley Kidney Pills contain no harmful drugs, and have successfully stood a long and thorough test. Schmitt's Drug Store.

Everybody is in favor of good roads, the country needs them and no sound objections are urged against them. Why, then, should not the country get them? And why should not each state strive for the honor of being in the front rank in the movement.

"IS LIFE WORTH SAVING?"
Mrs. Mollie McLaney, Prentiss, Miss., writes that she had a severe case of kidney and bladder trouble, and that four bottles of Foley's Kidney Remedy cured her sound and well. ROBT. S. HOLLAR.

In loving remembrance of my dear husband, who died one year ago, June 20, 1909.
My dear husband, how I miss you. Miss you more than tongue can tell. Every hour and day that passes, Brings me nearer with you to dwell.
Friends may think that I've forgotten, And my wounded heart is healed, But they little know the sorrow, That's within my heart concealed.

How I watched to see him coming, How I waited to hear his call; O, how I miss you, dearest husband, No tongue but mine can tell.
None but those who have lost one, Can say my sorrow tell; And to him all I'll tell.
Round his silent grave I linger, Telling all his hopes are perished With the flower I cherished so.

Here, oh, here, my earnest heart cry, I would lean upon thy breast; Neve, can I find such kindness, No where else such perfect rest.

Where thou art, I faint would tarry, Quick come and bear me hence, There thine arm shall be my safeguard, And thy love my sure defense.

BY HIS WIFE

Virginia's sorrow is keenly shared by the country at large. Nationally, John W. Daniel occupied a place in popular esteem none but a man exceptionally endowed with lovable qualities could attain. Soldier, lawyer, politician, orator and statesman, he leaves a record of achievement in each of these capacities which his biographers shall blend into the splendid literary memorial his life work justly merits, and dedicate the volumes to the good of posterity. But the generation in which Daniel lived saw first in his rounded personality the charm of that component part of greatness which inspires in us a sentiment quite apart from the admiration we bestow upon the possessor of mere force of character. This distinguishing gift or faculty, too elusive for successful portrayal along with the other attributes of his character, passed away with him in the death of the first citizen of Virginia the old school loses its most representative figure in Congress.—Washington Post.

Senator Daniel was a man of uncompromising honesty and tremendous force of character. Whatever he professed, he firmly believed. Convincing and wonderfully persuasive in oratory—a veritable knight in debate—he nevertheless held his every word of mouth strictly accountable to his conscience. He always and inevitably commanded the entire respect of the public, because he never sought to trifle with it or play cheap politics.

He was the idol of his immediate constituency in Virginia. The Old Dominion was proud of Daniel, and gloried in his achievement and victories; if he made mistakes, Virginia forgave them, because Virginia knew they were mistakes of the head alone. It had long been thoroughly understood that Daniel should be permitted to die in the Senate if he so elected. Senator Daniel's life history is inspiring and uplifting. He was without fear and reproach—an ornament to his State, distinctly elevating influence in politics, and a citizen in whom the entire nation might be well pleased.—Washington Herald.

In Bad Fix
"I had a mishap at the age of 41, which left me in bad fix," writes Mrs. Georgia Usher, of Conyers, Ga. "I was unconscious for three days, and after that I would have fainting spells, dizziness, nervousness, sick headache, heart palpitation and many strange feelings. "I suffered greatly with ailments due to the change of life and had 3 doctors, but they did no good, so I concluded to try Cardui."
"Since taking Cardui, I am so much better and can do all my housework."

Take CARDUI
The Woman's Tonic
Do not allow yourself to get into a bad fix. You might get in so bad you would find it hard to get out. Better take Cardui while there is time, while you are still in moderately good health, just to conserve your strength and keep you in tip top condition.
In this way your troubles, whatever they are, will gradually grow smaller instead of larger—you will be on the up-grade instead of the down-grade and by and bye you will arrive at the north pole of perfect health.

Frames for the Hot-Bed.
In many instances, dried, waterproof cloth will answer every purpose for the hot or cold frames, and it is much less expensive than glass. Common white muslin may be used, and the simplest way is to saturate the muslin with pure, raw linseed oil, this may be put on the frames. Another way is to take three parts of pale linseed oil, one ounce of sugar of lead, four ounces of white resin. Grind and mix the sugar of lead in a little oil, then add the other materials and heat in an iron kettle, applying hot with a brush. Thin, stout manilla paper may be stretched over a frame and pasted firmly down with fresh flour paste, then painted on both sides with boiled linseed oil; but this is not so lasting as the muslin, nor to be recommended where the muslin may be had.
